parents' guide: providence + beyond

mediakit

kidoinfomission

Since its' founding in 2007 by mom and artist Anisa Raoof, Kidoinfo—which targets families with children 12 and under—has become a trusted hub for everything about kids in Rhode Island. Kidoinfo provides a hip platform for parents and caregivers seeking a sense of community, useful resources and interesting offline activities—not to mention the scoop on the best places for ice cream after a bike ride.

Kidoinfo's fresh-spin on delivering information comes from a wellspring of local contributors consisting of local authors, parents and program directors. The website's daily blog provides content on topics relevant to young families, such as education, cooking and crafts, useful tips, reviews, local news and more.

The Kidoinfo brand starts with the website which includes a blog, directory and events calendar. Offline Kidoinfo offers: Craft Workshops for Kids; Conversations; Sponsored Events (AS220 Foo Fest, Providence Children's Film Festival); and Providence Storytime.

By reaching out to the greater community online and offline, Kidoinfo continuously provides innovative solutions to advertisers to reach parents in Providence and beyond.

founder • editor • creative director

Anisa Raoof lives in Providence with her husband and twin boys. She created Kidoinfo to be a central source for everything about kids in the Providence area. Anisa combines being a mom with her experience as an artist, designer, psych researcher and former co-director of the Providence Craft Show.

Anisa believes in the power of working together and enjoys finding ways to collaborate with others. By using social media, she has connected hundreds of parents with family-related businesses and services, working tirelessly to discover and share ways "to make parenting easier, still fun and even a little cool."

contributors

A fabulous team of writers and thinkers share their knowledge, passion, fresh ideas and helpful tips:

Anika Denise (books) • Beth Curtin (art + craft) • Douglas Itkin (technology)

Erin Barrette Goodman (motherhood) • Elyse Major (craft / local adventure / home design)

Hannah Marcotti (vegetables: A to Z) • Jill Davidson (education) • Jeanine Silversmith (nature)

Jaci Arnone (general parenting) • Katy Killilea (grocery news + more) • Kristen Kardos & Kathy McGuigan (new moms)

Linda Demers (handmade) • Michelle Rigger-Ransom (nature-nurture) • Maura Keating (parent tester)

kidoinfocommunity

website

Original articles post daily from dozens of contributors about topics that range from book reviews to what to look for in a preschool to the best places to sled. Kidoinfo's pool of writing talent comes from sources as varied as well-known authorities like the Providence Children's Museum to up-and-coming organizations such as RI New Moms to local authors. Kidoinfo articles are likely to include a dash of local flavor which adds to the relatable nature of the site as a whole.

directory

Kidoinfo's resource directory boasts an ever-growing list of categories from camp guides to playgrounds to zoos. Listings contain address and contact information as well as brief and helpful descriptions and details.

events calendar

Bursting full of Rhode Island area events, parents and caregivers can check the calendar regularly, finding fun family events every day of the week.

email

Subscribers opt-in to receive: Daily (for the most recent blog post in your inbox each morning); Local (with deals and Weekend Picks' list of family-friendly events in and around the Ocean State); Sponsored Events (targets news about Kidoinfo events including the Conversation series); and Everywhere (for fresh ideas, blog news and cool deals for parents of kids anywhere).

sponsored events

Kidoinfo proudly lends its support to events that enrich the community. Past events include a Parents-Night-Out at Whole Foods, an interactive exhibit at AS220's Foo Fest event, and promoting the Providence Children's Film Festival.

storytime

In Summer 2010, families packed blankets and enjoyed different weekly storytellers under the trees in Burnside Park, Providence. Kidoinfo featured at least one book each week from a Rhode Island author or illustrator.

conversations

Kidoinfo regularly hosts panel discussions on topics that are relevant to parents and caregivers. Events are held at local restaurants and attendees look forward to an evening of thoughtful discourse and good food.

Kidoinfo is a virtual gathering place and resource exchange for people who care about kids while the Children's Museum is a physical one: We are natural partners. We're so happy to work with Kidoinfo to create community and nurture support for children's play and learning.

– Janice O'Donnell, Executive Director, Providence Children's Museum

My children and I had a terrific time at Burnside Park this morning, relaxing under the big shady tree and listening to two terrific authors read to us. Thank you for organizing this awesome story-time, and for encouraging families to come downtown. We took the bus (an exciting event in itself for the kids!) and enjoyed being in the city center for the morning. Thanks for all you do via Kidoinfo to make Providence (and Rhode Island) a better place for families!
